Abstract:

The josha-journal is committed to diversity and publishes articles from different language and cultural areas. In this issue we publish papers from Nigeria, Argentina, Colombia, Australia and the USA. In this context, the contribution by photographer and blogger Johanna Patton, who dedicates herself to different cultures with her "together project" is particularly noteworthy - in this article, she is travelling in northern Thailand. Please download full editorial below to read about more updates and find the full list of Issue 2 articles.

Editorial

Volume 9, Issue 2

Dear josha-journal readers,

The Josha-Journal is committed to diversity and publishes articles from different language and cultural areas. In this issue we publish papers from Nigeria, Argentina, Colombia, Australia and the USA. In this context, the contribution by photographer and blogger Johanna Patton, who dedicates herself to different cultures with her "together project," is particularly noteworthy - in this article, she is travelling in northern Thailand.

A second focus of this issue is data and how to deal with it. Shoshana Zuboff writes in her article that surveillance capitalism is the dominant economic institution of our time. Miriam Tormin and Philipp Overkamp deal with government control options to promote the sharing of research data in Germany.

In addition to our author update we would also like to let you know that we have added an option for our writers to publish their work on a "PrePrint Server". Take a look at the site here: <https://staging.josha-journal.org>. The authors make the desired choice during the submission process.

Remember: If you prefer to read articles of your specific field of interest only (e.g. Medicine, Sciences, Artificial Intelligence, etc.) you can select the category on the far left of the Josha site.
