JOSHA Editorial Volume 3 Issue 7

This issue started with Detlef Liebs enlightening us with the “Persecution of Christians by the Roman Emperor Nero”. Following, Jenny Groten, Christoph Borner, and Roland Mertelsmann shared their knowledge on “Understanding and Controlling Cancer: The Hallmark Concept Revisited – Chance, Evolution and Entropy”, which was a critical part of Jenny Groten’s thesis to become a Medical Doctor. Moreover, Roland Mertelsmann, Christoph Borner, Oliver Worm, Maximilian Georg et al. introduced novel concepts in the war against cancer in their article “Towards Simulating Carcinogenesis: Modeling and Simulating Carcinogenesis, Hematopoietic Tissue Homeostasis and Leukemogenesis”. Once again, our brand-new IASHA member Dr. Bujar Bajcinovci amazed us with the “Challenges of Architectural Design in relation to Environment and Air Pollution. A Case study: Prishtina’s first public parking garage”. His contributions keep adding value to our journal with both simplicity and innovative concepts. Finally, we ended the issues with Ignacio Mastroleo’s contribution to the Philosophy section of JOSHA with his discussion of the “Democratic reciprocity model: a justification of continued access to an investigational medicine in clinical research”.

We are now closing the last issue of 2016, so we can give 2017 the opportunity to surprise us with new content, authors, and members of our growing JOSHA community. Since the foundation of our journal in December 2014, our articles have reached almost 120,000 views and over 95,000 downloads. Among the most viewed publications, Ignacio Mastroleo’s first contribution “La obligación de continuidad de tratamiento beneficioso hacia los sujetos de investigación” has reached 2,800 views and 1,800 downloads showing the reach of JOSHA published articles. Now that the last issue is over, we are looking forward to what the upcoming year will bring.
